A Additional Analyses

In Table A1, we examine differences between the treatment groups in terms of knowledge of historical and contemporary political violence. We find no significant difference between the two groups in their existing knowledge of lynching violence in Models 1 and 2. We also find no significant difference between the two groups in their knowledge of the BLM movement in Model 3.

In Table A2, we consider how one’s Maryland roots and residency in a county with a large Black population might affect engagement with our treatments. We interact Maryland roots and the treatment in Model 1 and county and the treatment in Model 2. We find no significant interaction effects.

Table A3 accounts for an interaction between age and the treatments. There is no significant effect for age and age cohort as individual indicators or when interacted with the treatment. This suggests that age is not a significant factor in respondents' assessment of the treatments, in relation to the dependent variables (support for symbolic TJ in Models 1 and 2 and support for material TJ in Models 3 and 4).

Treatment Vignettes

Control [All surveys]: No vignette

Treatment 1 [Maryland survey]: Exposure to information about lynching violence

Between 1860 and 1940, more than 40 African Americans were lynched by White mobs in the state of Maryland. Lynching violence terrorized Black people in each community where it took place. In many cases, local law enforcement did not intervene to prevent violence and sometimes encouraged the activities of the White mobs. Today, the communities in which lynching violence took place make up 17 of Maryland's 24 counties.

Treatment 2 [Maryland survey]: Exposure to information about police violence

Since 2015, 109 African Americans have been killed by police in the state of Maryland. In the United States, 1 in 1,000 Black men, compared to 1 in 2,500 white men, at the hands of police.
